Recit. Moses

But see, the deep returns the lifeless corse, and spreads the shores with trophies of the Dead. these were our foes! — but enmity and life should cease to-ceases, and the weary rest — Far, far from us be unrelenting revenge, & all the furies of the mind. if God, long suffring, shall chastise our foes let us thus warn'd, rejoice with fear before him, in just displeasure if our crimes are punish'd, not vainly chastn'd, let us kiss the rod: to these whatever from pity they can take let pity give, for man is born to woe.

Moses

To God this sacrifice of love is pleasing, for god is love; tho= =pendious are his ways, ye cannot fathom them; the depth and ~~height~~ height surpass your utmost reach of thought; to me be partly dis= =clos'd thro' clouds and dimly seen. yet know these wonders are not for this age, nor you, ye chosen from the nations wrought these are but types, the substance is to come: the prince of peace who the' from Jacob sprung was yet ere Abrams day, he from-uniuerse bondage shall like a shepherd lead his chosen-race to yet a better canaan, there to quaff the streams of life and taste immortal fruit
